“Using CIM for DSO/TSO Integration and Information Exchange”

Sponsorship Prospectus

About CIMug

Utilities are now collecting and storing vast amounts of data regarding their operational systems with the goal of using that data to improve reliability, service metrics, customer satisfaction and asset utilization. Many existing legacy systems are isolated and fragmented lacking a unified approach to data management and resulting in barriers to interoperability and integration. Many utilities are adapting a data-driven architecture for enterprise integration based on the IEC CIM standards as the means by they can turn this data into information that can be more easily used improve the utility enterprise's performance.

From 5 – 7 June 2018, all of those involved in using the CIM will share their use cases and experiences across any application from model exchange, application integration, big data analytics, to data management using enterprise semantic modeling and beyond. Our theme this year is "Using CIM for DSO/TSO Integration and Information Exchange". The need for power system analysis at DSO voltage levels is a rapidly growing trend. There is need for closer cooperation with TSOs, which requires the exchange of network models and other types of data, to satisfy the new network codes being deployed in Europe and elsewhere.
